Novel magneto-optic methods use macroscopic nuclear magnetisation to change the polarisation state of light. The proposed nuclear spin Cotton–Mouton effect may provide a new means of high-resolution molecular spectroscopy, as shown on p. 2337 by L.-j. Fu and J. Vaara.